BIOGRAPHY OF SWAMI JNANANANDA IN BRIEF

Swami Jnanananda was A RARE renowned saint and a great modern scientist. One of the greatest personages, the world can truly be proud of him. Born on 5th December 1896, in Goraganamudi, West Godavari District of Andhra Pradesh, India, the son of Bhupathi Raju Rama Raju and Sita Devi. Swami Jnanananda left for the Himalayas when he was 21. There he practiced yoga for about 10 years and studied Vedic literature and 'transcended' into a legendary saint. He wrote poems, commentaries on classical Vedic philosophy, even original masterpieces like Purna Sutras.

In 1927 he left India for Germany where he lectured on Vedic philosophy. However, he used his stay there to study mathematics and theoretical and experimental physics at the Colleges of Science and technology, Dresden. He then took up research in High Tension and X-Ray Physics at the Charles University, Prague, where he was awarded the degree of Doctor of Science.

At the beginning of World War, he left Germany and reached England where he joined the University of Liverpool and did remarkable researches in Nuclear Physics, Spectroscopy of Beta-radiations in the laboratories of Noble laureate Sri Jameschadwick. He was awarded Ph.D. there. During this period he became Fellow of London's famous Institute of Physics and wrote a book on 'high vacuum'.

At the peak of World War II, he was invited to the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor in the United States where he carried out important research work in Nuclear physics for three years.

He came back to India in 1947 and joined the National Physical Laboratory in Delhi. In 1954 he came to Andhra University and started and developed department of nuclear physics and guided a large number of students for D.Sc. and Ph.D Degrees. He passed away in 1969.

A memorial, Swami Jnanananda Jnanavijnana Vihar was built in Goraganamudi where Swamiji's body rests in Eternal Silence.
